MONIQUE TRUONG is the author of the “poetically rendered and literally savory” 2003 novel, The Book of Salt, the story of a gay Vietnamese cook who worked for Gertrude Stein and Alice B. Toklas in Paris during the 1920s and 1930s, and his previous life in Vietnam.

Truong was born in Saigon in 1968 and moved to the U.S. at the age of six. She graduated from Yale University and Columbia University School of Law. Among other honors, The Book of Salt received the 2003 Bard Fiction Prize, the Stonewall Book Award–Gittings Literature Award, and the Young Lions Fiction Award, and was given an Award of Excellence from the Vietnamese American Studies Center at San Francisco State University. She is also the co-editor of Watermark: Vietnamese American Poetry & Prose, with Barbara Tran and Luu Truong Khoi, and numerous essays and works of short fiction.
